I cannot very well tell what all these compliments are about, and feel something like Sancho in the island of Barataria.

At dinner at Perregaux's I met Senovert, who was sent last year with Monneson, to try if they could open a negotiation for peace, but got no farther than Canterbury, Lord Malmesbury wfaccable d'honnfitetes, and wishes me to dine with him every day.

I have asked leave officially to see Sir Sidney Smith, and expect it to be granted and that I shall be able to effect his liberation upon parole, for the face of things seems much softened.

I spent last evening at Madame de la Live's, with all the cousins and tantes, very agreeably.

La petite Laborde is here, and I shall call on her to-morrow. Auguste, her son, turned out very ill, and some escIandre of his was the cause of his father's being dragged from his hiding-place and guillotined*
